It is because almost 50 years ago, I came to Italy as a student and I fell in love with the enchanting Italian landscape, its long history, its wonderful culture and, above all, the warmth and friendliness of its people. LDC has not only invested in Italy for economic and commercial purposes but because of a love for Italy's history, culture and people! It all started on a family trip to Italy, at the beautiful Villa Monte Solare in Umbria..."

Palazzo Venart
HOTEL VENEZIA

Introduction

The Grand Canal in Venice is without a doubt the most recognisable waterway in the world, thanks to the presence of historic landmarks, magnificent private mansions, museums, churches, basilicas and various contemporary properties that were built over the centuries.

Among these is an important historic building, from the 1400s, which for hundreds of years was known as Palazzo Bacchini delle Palme.

After years of neglect, the palace reopened in September 2016, thanks to considerable restoration works, under the name of Palazzo Venart - Luxury Hotel.

A 5 star hotel with 18 elegant and finely decorated rooms and suites, each based on a unique aspect of Venetian history and culture, paying tribute to people and features who have made Venice legendary.

Palazzo Venart is also renowned for being one of the few buildings that offers a garden overlooking the Grand Canal.

After an extensive two-year make-over, the entire building has been carefully restored, as if it were an antique Murano glass chandelier, piece by piece, and room by room, under the close supervision of Venetian art historians and the Superintendence of Fine Arts.

Faded frescoes and paintings from the 1800s on the ceilings and walls, and the painted wooden beams, have been restored to their former glory by local restorers, as well as the Murano glass and bronze ceiling lamps, while its Venetian furniture and fabrics, some of which are prestigious antiques, come from Venetian artisans.

Guests will relive the building's aristocratic history.

Upon awakening they will have no doubt where they are: the rooms that pay homage to and are named after Tiziano, Casanova, Marco Polo, Dandolo, Lord Byron, Murano and Carnevale (to name just a few of the 18 rooms and suites), will move you back into the old world charm of Venice, the 'Queen of the Adriatic'.

Today the building has the style and flair of the golden eighteenth century. When you close your eyes you can imagine the violinists that were summoned to the palace to cheer the city's splendid aristocrats, who gathered to dance, play cards or talk about Venetian life facts.

The noble floor, from which you can admire the view of the garden and the Grand Canal, is decorated with an antique Christie's piano, which arrived at the palace by way of the experts at Fondazione La Fenice, and a lavish library full of books about the city in all languages.

The hotel's ground floor features original tempera frescoes depicting Venetian social gatherings, which would have taken place in the palace, inspired by Michelangelo Mortalier's fresco in Palazzo Grassi.

All the architectural and artistic elements were carefully recovered, restored, cleaned and reinforced, after the many years of neglect which Palazzo Bacchini delle Palme endured.

The entire process of restoration and decoration was personally and passionately followed by LDC Hotels & Resorts, which, together with outstanding general direction by Mr. Angelo Rizzi, who has decades of experience in luxury hospitality at the Principe di Savoia in Milan and at Villa d'Este on Lake Como, made Palazzo Venart a new jewel of the Venetian hotel industry.

History

Palazzo Bacchini delle Palme on the Grand Canal in Venice has regained its former glory after years of neglect and abandonment, thanks to a careful restoration of its decorative elements that was completed in 2016.

Palazzo Bacchini delle Palme has been part of Venice's thousand-year history since the beginning and many noteworthy characters passed through its entrance. In the 1400s the building, which was formerly owned by the Lion family, and therefore by the Verniers, was inhabited by the great mercenary captain Pandolfo Malatesta, Lord of Rimini and patron of the arts. He took refuge here after he was excommunicated and condemned to the stake due to his excessive greed for triumph and money. The unfortunate Francesco da Bussone, often called the Count of Carmagnola, who was accused of treason and beheaded in Piazzetta San Marco between the two columns, also lived here. After this, the beautiful property was purchased in 1433 by the noble Vitturi family, who sold it to Giustiniani.

This ancient and illustrious house owes itself to the extensions and embellishments that originally overlooked the Grand Canal, which occupied the entirety of today's garden area and developed according to the typical fifteenth century Venetian tripartite architecture, with an entrance hall on the waterfront.

The white marble façade was partitioned by arched windows, adorned with elegant Istrian stone balustrades.

Access to the building was through the Court and Calle Dandolo and from the ground floor an impressive staircase led to the main floors and the "casino". In the golden age of the eighteenth century, these were the reception rooms where, while violins played notes of Vivaldi, the most important urban aristocrats would gather to dance, play cards and chat about the most interesting news of the time.

In 1722, the wedding of the last heir of the Giustiniani family, Maria, daughter of Antonio, and the prosecutor of San Marco, Simon Contarini, heir to one of the city's "evangelical families", whose family tree includes doges, diplomats and bishops, was celebrated at the palace. In that period the hall became a functional space, benches were placed against the walls and two "ferali" or lights, which have been preserved to this day, were installed to illuminate the doorway and the main staircase.

Throughout the centuries the building has always been one of the most beautiful in the city. In fact, in 1819 it appeared in the travel guide entitled, "Forestiero Istruito nelle cose più pregevoli e curiose antiche e moderne della città di Venezia" (A foreigner educated in the most valuable and curious, ancient and modern things in the city of Venice).

On 21st April, 1809 Francesco Pini Bey, son of Giovanni, Napoleon's right hand man in the famous Egyptian campaign, was born in the property. He was a learned man who was passionate about mathematics and devoted to trade. Following in the footsteps of his father, he obtained the posts of representative of Venice and administrator of the wealth of the Pasha of Egypt.

He returned to Venice in 1868 and bought the building, whose facade facing the Grand Canal had in the meantime been destroyed, during a fire in 1845. The hall and the portion of the building which housed the "casino" were saved from the fire.

The restoration work lasted for more than a decade: in the first phase from 1851/2 the dangerous areas were made safe and time was devoted to structural works, while from 1864 the spaces, and decorative elements, were redefined.

Further restoration was carried out in 1880 during the period in which the property was owned by Amelia Richetti, who received an inheritance of Venetian properties from her husband. These properties included the San Stae buildings and an estate in Altino, an ancient pre-Roman city that has now disappeared. Her daughter Adele married Lieutenant Colonel Edmondo Bacchini delle Palme who was responsible for the coat of arms placed in the hall. Its symbols remind us of the close link with the Church of Rome.

The creation of the tempera paintings, adorning the walls and ceilings of the hallway that we see today, date back to the time when the building was fully restored. They recapture the essence of the fresco painted by Michelangelo Mortalier at Palazzo Grassi, and show convivial scenes of the Venetian world that bear witness to the life of the palace. The characters are portrayed facing towards a false wooden balcony and a false loggia appears in the background. The scenes, designed to be viewed from below and from a distance, are thought to have been carried out after the demolition of the stepping stones that connected the two wings of the mezzanine floor above the marble staircase. Reading the surveys conducted during the restoration has shown that many pigments used in the creation of the paintings such as zinc white, artificial ultramarine blue and chrome yellow, as well as inorganic binders with carbonated lime combined with plaster, were used only in the second half of the nineteenth century.

The renovation completed in 2016, aimed at the preservation of all traces of the transformations undergone over the centuries at the palace, has even brought new life to the decorations on the ceilings and walls of the hallway, as well as the stone architectural elements which characterise the environment, such as the precious marble staircase leading to the mezzanine floor and the Istrian stone doorway on the main floor.

In the twentieth century period the restoration of the demolished area overlooking the Grand Canal was returned to. A pleasure garden was created, embellished with statues and artefacts in part from the earlier building and partly from the Roman archaeological site of Altino.

In the years to follow Bacchini delle Palme donated a part of the collection to the Museum of Altino, where the pieces are still preserved today, while others were left in the garden, giving it the typical charm of a place that is full of history.

In August 2016, restoration work carried out by the Taiwanese hotel group, LDC Hotels & Resorts, finished and the palace was renamed Palazzo Venart - Luxury Hotel, with the aim of becoming one of the city's most esteemed 5 star hotels.
